

Peacedeals.org Launches Online Mediation Service
New web service provides dispute resolution for everyday life.

CALGARY, AB - May 1, 2007 - Peacedeals Inc. launched their flagship service today, an innovative mediation platform called peacedeals.org. Offering “objective, friendly online mediation,” peacedeals.org is designed to help solve problems in everyday life and on the web.

Any web user seeking smooth dispute resolution can bring their case to peacedeals.org to be examined by one of the site’s carefully-selected mediators. Opening a case simply involves signing up and sending an e-mail invitation to the offending party. After each party has explained their perspective, uploaded any visual evidence, and responded to any questions from the mediator, an informed decision is rendered by the mediator and sealed with a “Peacedeal Treaty.”

Peacedeals.org is well-suited for resolving conflicts in local, commercial and virtual environments. Locally, peacedeals.org can help with landlord/tenant disputes, complicated family troubles and workplace disagreements. For businesses, peacedeals.org can provide a credible, non-hostile alternative to collection services and delinquent account recovery. Online, peacedeals.org provides responsible way for buyers, sellers, bloggers and gamers to solve issues arising from life online.

Each case is overseen by screened mediators from diverse backgrounds, and decisions are rendered using Binding Arbitration, the legal process used in television shows such as the “The People’s Court.” Starting at $5 per case, topics range from family disputes to bad business deals.

Because of its accessibility and low costs, peacedeals.org is a practical middle ground between unscreened online advice forums and a costly judicial system. Additionally, those interested in serving as mediators will find peacedeals.org to be an exciting new opportunity, as it gives accepted applicants the chance to earn extra income while participating in constructive dialogue on the net.

Harnessing the power of the user-driven revolution, peacedeals.org blends engaging Web 2.0 technology with down-to-earth human understanding. With interactive features such as a free public advice forum and a mediator ratings system, peacedeals.org aims to bring open communication back in style.

Peacedeals.org is well-positioned to become the social conscience of the Internet, providing credible, objective decision-making to all communities, online and off.

For more information, please contact the media representative listed on our website:
www.peacedeals.org